

Illustrative sample · fictional names and dates

TWIN FLAME CONNECT

A COMPATIBILITY REPORT FOR

Alex & Sam

76 points

PATTERN SCORE · POINTS OUT OF 100

Soulmate

Your inputs fall in this calculator's Soulmate band. Use the label to reflect on what companionship means to you. Names and birthdays cannot establish a lasting bond, shared values, or a relationship's future.

READING AT A GLANCE

Alex & Sam

NUMEROLOGY

8

ALEX · LIFE PATH

5

SAM · LIFE PATH

Name vibration · Alex

6

Name vibration · Sam

6

Name pattern points

100

Life-path pattern points

50

APPROXIMATE DATE-ONLY ASTROLOGY

ALEX

Sagittarius

FIRE

SAM

Libra

AIR

Element pattern points

70

Notable patterns

Complementary elements

Fire + Air or Earth + Water: traditionally paired elements. Their presence does not establish relationship compatibility.

Score working: $100 \times 0.4 + 50 \times 0.3 + 70 \times 0.3 = 76 \rightarrow 76$ points.

Calculation method: pythagorean-components-v2.

Name

100 × 40% weight

40 points

Life path

50 × 30% weight

15 points

Elements

70 × 30% weight

21 points

Weighted total 76 · rounded once

76 points

Editorial label: Soulmate at 76 points.

01

The numerology layer

Alex

MONTH	DAY	YEAR
11	11	22
11	29 → 11	1984 → 22

$$11 + 11 + 22 = 44 \rightarrow 8$$

Life path 8

Sam

MONTH	DAY	YEAR
1	22	9
10 → 1	22	1980 → 18 → 9

$$1 + 22 + 9 = 32 \rightarrow 5$$

Life path 5

This reading uses Pythagorean letter values and a named method for reducing birth dates. These calculations describe symbolic patterns in the supplied information. They do not measure either person's character or the quality of a relationship.

For life paths, reduce the month, day, and year separately, keeping 11, 22, and 33 when they occur, then reduce the combined total. Other numerology schools use different methods; the component method used here follows the published instructions from Numerology.com and Hans Decoz.

Alex: month 11; day 29 → 11; year 1984 → 22. Combine the reduced components: $11 + 11 + 22 = 44 \rightarrow 8$. Life path: 8; comparison root: 8.

Sam: month 10 → 1; day 22; year 1980 → 18 → 9. Combine the reduced components: $1 + 22 + 9 = 32 \rightarrow 5$. Life path: 5; comparison root: 5.

Alex — supplied name: ALEX gives a letter total of 15; reduction: $15 \rightarrow 6$. Name number: 6; comparison root: 6.

Sam — supplied name: SAM gives a letter total of 6; reduction: 6. Name number: 6; comparison root: 6.

The traditional master numbers have single-digit roots: $11 \rightarrow 2$, $22 \rightarrow 4$, and $33 \rightarrow 6$. The current comparison method uses these roots for pattern points while retaining master numbers in the individual reading. A master number is not a superior person or proof of a special bond.

Common numerology themes associated with these roots are organisation and ambition and adaptability and freedom. Treat these as questions to explore: which, if any, fit what you have actually observed? Neither person has to fit the description.

Name numbers refer to the spelling supplied. A first-name calculation should not be mistaken for a full Expression chart, for which the usual convention is to use the complete birth name. Accented Latin letters are normalised to their base letters in the current method.

02

The astrology layer

Fire

Sagittarius

Whole-sign geometry · not a birth chart

Air

Libra

The date-only lookup gives Alex: Sagittarius (Fire) and Sam: Libra (Air). These are approximate tropical sun signs. We have not calculated a birth chart, solar longitude, birth-time adjustment, houses, or other planets.

At least one sign is unconfirmed near a possible sign-change date, or the saved result has no boundary assessment. Exact birth time and time zone, together with an ephemeris, are needed to resolve a boundary-date Sun sign. The score here retains the approximate sign from the date table.

At the level of signs, Sagittarius and Libra have a sextile relationship: 2 intervals of 30°, or 60° along the shorter arc. This is whole-sign geometry, not a claim that the actual Suns form that exact aspect. An aspect between planets depends on their calculated positions and an allowed orb.

Traditional element descriptions associate Fire with initiative and enthusiasm and Air with ideas and communication. These descriptions can provide language for discussing differences, but they are not evidence of anyone's habits, feelings, or intentions.

The element lookup contributes 70 pattern points, weighted at 30% of the overall index. The points are this site's editorial scoring convention. They do not express the chance of love, reunion, conflict, or relationship success.

For a useful conversation, ask how each person prefers to make decisions, communicate uncertainty, and change plans. Compare the answers with behaviour over time. If the symbolic description does not fit, set it aside; the people and their choices matter more than the labels.

03

Notable patterns

These flags identify features of the supplied names and dates. They are descriptions of input patterns, not evidence of destiny, mutual feelings, or a relationship outcome.

Traditionally complementary elements: Fire and Air. Fire/Air and Earth/Water are commonly paired in elemental interpretation. This symbolic pairing cannot establish that the people communicate well or want the same things.

Notice which details catch your attention and which you ignore. A pattern may feel meaningful without proving a cause. Before using it to make a decision, write down the observable behaviour that supports your interpretation and the evidence that would make you reconsider it.

FLAGGED PATTERN

Complementary elements

Fire + Air or Earth + Water: traditionally paired elements. Their presence does not establish relationship compatibility.

04

The connection

Use organisation and ambition and adaptability and freedom as starting points for reflection. These are symbolic themes, not established descriptions of either person. Keep the ideas that help you ask clearer questions and leave the rest.

Separate what you know from what you hope. Write down how often contact is mutual, whether plans are kept, and whether disagreement can be discussed without pressure. A strong feeling can be important to you without telling you what the other person feels.

If you can speak openly and safely, ask each other what kind of connection you want and what you are willing to offer. Listen for a specific answer. If an answer is uncertain, let it remain uncertain instead of treating ambiguity as an invitation to wait indefinitely.

A useful reading should leave room for either person to disagree with it. You do not need to accept a spiritual label to care about someone, and you do not need a label's permission to step back.

05

Strengths

Use organisation and ambition and adaptability and freedom as starting points for reflection. These are symbolic themes, not established descriptions of either person. Keep the ideas that help you ask clearer questions and leave the rest.

Look for strengths you can describe with an example. When did either person listen carefully, follow through, make room for a difference, or acknowledge a mistake? A helpful compliment describes an action that happened instead of assigning a permanent role to a person.

If there is a shared priority, discuss what it looks like in practice. Wanting closeness might involve regular conversation for one person and reliable plans for the other. Finding the difference can make a shared intention more useful.

If the relationship is new or contact is limited, there may not yet be enough information. You can appreciate a promising interaction without deciding what it means for the future. Allow trust to develop through repeated, freely chosen behaviour.

06

Challenges and shadow work

Use organisation and ambition and adaptability and freedom as starting points for reflection. These are symbolic themes, not established descriptions of either person. Keep the ideas that help you ask clearer questions and leave the rest.

Choose a disagreement you can describe without guessing motives. Record what happened, how it affected you, and what you would ask to change. Compare that account with the other person's if doing so is safe and welcome.

Check whether a compromise allows both people to keep meaningful boundaries. A request for space, a refusal, or an ended relationship should be taken at face value. A symbolic reading does not turn those limits into hidden encouragement.

If a pattern of pressure, fear, or harm is present, focus on practical support and safety rather than trying to explain it through spirituality. You do not have to endure mistreatment to learn a lesson or preserve a connection.

07

Looking ahead

Use organisation and ambition and adaptability and freedom as starting points for reflection. These are symbolic themes, not established descriptions of either person. Keep the ideas that help you ask clearer questions and leave the rest.

The future cannot be inferred from the supplied names and birthdays. Instead, identify the conditions that would make continued contact worthwhile for you: mutual interest, reliable communication, respect for limits, or a concrete repair after disagreement.

Consider what improvement would look like in observable terms. A promise might begin a conversation, but follow-through gives you more information. Decide when you will revisit the situation rather than leaving the decision open indefinitely.

Make room for more than one acceptable outcome. Continuing, changing the relationship, or ending contact can each be reasonable depending on the circumstances. None is prescribed by the reading, and neither person's choice can be made on the other's behalf.

08

What to do next

Use organisation and ambition and adaptability and freedom as starting points for reflection. These are symbolic themes, not established descriptions of either person. Keep the ideas that help you ask clearer questions and leave the rest.

Write a short account of an interaction without spiritual labels or inferred motives. Separate the event from your interpretation. This makes it easier to notice what is supported and what remains unknown.

Identify a need and a boundary you can state plainly. If contact is welcome and safe, discuss them without asking the other person to accept the reading. If contact is unwelcome, respect that limit and use the exercise privately.

Review what you learn after you have had time to observe actual behaviour. Keep support, friendships, and routines outside the relationship. If distress is disrupting daily life, consider speaking with a qualified mental-health professional for help with your own situation.

METHODOLOGY

The pattern score is an editorial index: name points × 40% + life-path points × 30% + element points × 30%, rounded once at the end. The point tables and label rules belong to Twin Flame Connect; they are not a standard numerology compatibility scale or a probability. The current tables produce scores from 35 to 97. A higher score does not establish a healthier relationship.

New readings reduce the month, day, and year separately, retaining 11, 22, and 33, then reduce their sum. Master numbers use roots 2, 4, and 6 for comparison. The supplied name is mapped to repeating A–Z values 1–9 after accent normalisation. Full Expression readings conventionally use the complete birth name. Legacy readings are identified in the calculation section.

Sun signs come from approximate calendar dates. No birth chart or planetary positions are calculated. The numerical sections are produced directly from stored calculation data. Reflection sections may use AI, with reviewed copy substituted if checks fail. Neither the scores nor the reflections establish personal history, compatibility, destiny, or future outcomes.

Method and point tables: twinflameconnect.com/methodology. Practitioner references: Numerology.com, “Life Path Number” and “Life Path Number Compatibility”; Hans Decoz, World Numerology, “Life Path Number 11.” These document conventions, not scientific validation.

ABOUT TWIN FLAME CONNECT

Twin Flame Connect publishes explanations of spiritual traditions and tools for reflection. A spiritual interpretation is distinct from research evidence. This report is not a psychological assessment or a substitute for professional care.

This report uses the names and dates submitted at checkout. Purchase records retain those inputs and the calculation snapshot so the report can be delivered and supported. See twinflameconnect.com/privacy for data handling and deletion requests.

twinflameconnect.com